Milwaukie Narrows City Manager Search Down to Four Finalists

In their efforts to find a new city manager to replace Bill Monahan, who will retire in October, City Council have narrowed the field of candidates down to four—Alice Cannon, Nancy Newton, Ann Ober and Julie Underwood.

The community will have a chance to meet the candidates in-person at a special Meet & Greet event on Monday, Aug. 22 from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Public Safety Building, 3200 SE Harrison Street, where attendees will have an opportunity to ask questions and discuss topics of interest to get to know the candidates better. Light refreshments will be served.

Position Opening – Purchasing Agent/Buyer

Are you a purchasing professional looking for quality of life and a way to serve your community? Do you love working with people in support of a higher purpose? [Company Name] could use your expertise!

[Company Name] seeks an experienced Purchasing Agent/Buyer to sustain and support the County’s operational needs. The purpose of the position is to manage the planning and procurement of goods and services and the disposal of surplus supplies and equipment. We are seeking a professional to work in an innovative and collaborative environment, pursuing the highest quality customer service for our internal and external customers. Join our team and collaborate in partnership with County departments to enhance the quality of life for County residents. This is accomplished by developing policies and procedures; evaluating and processing requisitions, procuring materials, supplies and services; administering contracts; managing materials, properties, surplus and inventories; and providing administrative direction.

This position initiates, reviews, coordinates and prepares bids, RFP’s and purchase orders. Reviews, administers contracts, monitors and assists departments with compliance of purchasing policies. Other duties include reviewing and assessing department workloads and presenting information to staff, commissioners and other officials.

The position requires an Associate’s degree in business, administration, or related field; additional education, training or experience in purchasing management and related fields is desirable. A valid driver’s license is required.

I am dropping you a personal note about your application for the position of XXXX. I was pleased to see your application, and at the same time I’m sorry to let you know that you have not been selected to interview. We received over 180 applications and an impressive amount of depth in large and complex organizations, and there were a number of people who I respect who didn’t make it to the interview stage.

I appreciate that this might not be the news that you were expecting, but I wanted you to hear it straight from me. Also, if you’d ever like to chat about your career ambitions, I’m usually up for a coffee or lunch.

Thank you for applying. I’m pleased to know that you want to grow as a local government professional.

Regards,
City Manager

Good afternoon.

First, apologies for the relative silence on the City side regarding this recruitment. Our process is not set up to be overly communicative, sadly.

Second, I wanted to let you know where things stand. We had a large number of applicants (~200) that was whittled down to ~100 that we felt were qualified for the position. From that, we narrowed the list down to a short list of 30 or so folks that we felt were the top candidates. You all are in that list of 30. We only had time and capacity to interview 12, so after some tough decisions, the list was narrowed down further to an initial set of interview candidates. Unfortunately, you did not make that list.

While I assume this is disappointing, it is not cause for despair. We had an exceptional group of people to choose from, yourselves included. Rarely in my many years of recruiting folks to the City have I had such a good pool, with such diverse backgrounds and ranges of expertise to choose from. A good problem to have, but a problem nonetheless… sincerely wish we could have interviewed many more.

That all said, there is a small chance that someone will withdraw in the next day or to, or that we will get through the first round and decide we want to interview additional candidates. It’s not extremely likely that you will hear from me in the next 24 hours, but it is possible. Otherwise, I will let you know when a final decision has been made.

Thanks again!

- Track the diversity of applicants, new hires (and past). For diverse hires, continue with whatever worked to get them hired.
- Ask them what works and for their advice on the organization’s diversity hiring initiatives.
- If you hire an employee who looks different than you, ask them why and how you were successful in hiring them.
- Don’t be shy about race, gender, sexuality, disability. Own the fact that you value inclusion.

Sponsors Have Capital

Unlike a mentor, a sponsor is someone who can not only advise you on your career, but actively help advance it. They have power in an organization and can use their social capital and credibility to advocate for you. According to a 2011 Harvard Business Review special report, sponsors not only advise their charges, they promote, protect, prepare, and push them.

Take Sheryl Sandberg, the COO of Facebook and a quintessentially successful woman. Would she have risen to the top without the advocacy of Larry Summers, who took her with him from Harvard to become his research assistant at the World Bank and later appointed her his chief of staff at the U.S. Treasury? Or without the support of Eric Schmidt, who recruited her and later gave her the critical assignments that would build her personal brand at Google?
1. Set up a regular meeting. The easiest approach to get some informal coaching is to invite on a regular basis a trusted local government manager to coffee or to lunch. During these sessions, swap stories and personal experiences.

2. Focus on a "growth mindset." With a growth mindset, we look at challenges and at experimenting and even at mistakes as opportunities to learn and grow. By doing this, we expand our portfolio of behaviors, skills, and relationships and ultimately become more effective in a disruptive environment.

3. Be open to the conversation. It is important to not only share your challenges and dilemmas with a coach, but to be open to the feedback and any suggestions on how to handle similar problems in the future.

4. Use the coach to promote self-reflection. Great leaders are self-reflective. Coaches can ask probing questions that promote reflection and self-critique and opportunities to make adjustments. After an informal or formal coaching conversation, reflect on what has been discussed and the implications for self-correction.

5. Learn from the stories. Chief executives love to tell war stories. Don't just enjoy the swapping of stories—probe for lessons that may be related to your dilemma or challenge.

Executive Director’s note: this submission was received from an ELGL with the request that it be published anonymously. Here at ELGL, we always accept anonymous submissions because we know that the power of local government storytelling doesn’t always occur at the perfect time in our careers. If you have a story to tell, we want to tell it, especially when it is timely, relevant, and important. If you wish to respond to this post or reach out to the author, please email me and I can share your contact information with the author.
